

OCTOBER 6-7, 2020
MENLO PARK, CA

SLASHDATA

Announcement

March 4, 2020

Future Developer Summit April event moves to October

In light of current events and the outbreak of coronavirus (COVID-19), SlashData has decided to postpone the Future Developer Summit: Engaging Open Source Developers, scheduled for April 7-8 at Menlo Park, CA. The event will now take place on October 6-7, coinciding with the company's second annual event.

As the number of people affected by COVID-19 appears to be rising exponentially and taking into account the recent rise in COVID-19 cases in the United States, SlashData has chosen to stand by its core values and prioritise the safety and well-being of all stakeholders and of the greater community.

All effort that was put in preparation for the event will be channelled to serve all participants in the October event, an event that will be safe for the Future Developer Summit community and which will only add value to all participants' personal and professional life.

Speakers, attendees and sponsors will be contacted within the next few days directly by the organisers, with detailed information on next steps.

Future Developer Summit was born because SlashData's vision to create a community of industry leaders and pioneers in developer marketing, who come together to design the future of developer programs. This remains its goal.

If, in the meantime, you need more information about the Future Developer Summit date change, please contact Viktorija Ignatavičiūtė - Events & PR Lead at viktorija@slashdata.co

For questions about COVID-19 and ways to protect yourself, please visit the World Health Organisation.